Jeremiah Heaton, a father of three children, is an American. One day in 2013, his 6-year-old daughter, Emily, told him about her hope to be a princess. Jeremiah did not let her down and said "Yes." From then on, Jeremiah started to surf on the Net, and he found a piece of sandwiched land, Bir Tawil, between Egypt and Sudan. It belonged to no one. He wanted his children to make a flag for their "new country." On Emily's seventh birthday, Jeremiah and his daughter fled to Egypt with their flag and spent 14 hours through the hot, dry land getting to Bir Tawil by car. When they got there, they found there were not many people living there. They were from Egypt and Sudan, but they welcomed Jeremiah and his daughter kindly. Then Jeremiah planted the flag and named their new country "The Kingdom of North Sudan," the smallest country in the world. Surely, he was the king, and Emily was the princess.

Bir Tawil is a very hot and dry area. It rains little. During the summer months, almost 9 months of the year, temperatures can be more than 40°C. The temperatures in short "winter
